The newer sterilizer in the OR, an AMSCO V116, has Steris' current controls and modified control software must be downloaded to enable shorter exposure durations to be programmed. After the testing was completed, the normal software was reloaded in that machine; and the short-exposure programming was removed from all of the sterilizers to ensure that only normal processing could take place.

LETHALITY RATE: Due to its exponential expression, the calculation of F0 is not immediate. Tables have therefore been developed which list the so-called Lethal Rates, i.e. the equivalence coefficients allowing to compare the exposure at the temperature T to the exposure for the same time at 121°C. Lethal Rates may also be regarded the F0-values for single unit of time.

Imagine yourself as a department leader walking into your sterile processing department (SPD) one morning to find a stack of 20 unprocessed loaner instrument sets for a 1:00 p.m. surgery. According to the healthcare facility loaner policy, the instruments should have been delivered before 1:00 p.m. the previous day in order to properly prepare for and process the instruments.
